Trump-eting the power of America (Italian origin)

America (named after Italian navigator Amerigo Vespucci) is now to be made great by the descendant of a Scottish migrant

The opening remarks of President Trump's diatribe at the Capitol Rotunda on the occasion of his installation in office on 20 January 2015.

Did he say, during his rhetoric, that he is the representative of his god on earth?

"The Golden Age of America begins right now. From this day forward, our country will flourish and be respected again all over the world. We will be the envy of every nation, and we will not allow ourselves to be taken advantage of any longer. During every single day of the Trump administration, I will very simply put America first. Our sovereignty will be reclaimed. Our safety will be restored. The scales of justice will be rebalanced. The vicious, violent and unfair weaponization of the Justice Department and our government will end. And our top priority will be to create a nation that is proud, prosperous and free. America will soon be greater, stronger, and far more exceptional than ever before. I return to the presidency confident and optimistic that we are at the start of a thrilling new era of national success, a tide of change is sweeping the country, sunlight is pouring over the entire world, and America has the chance to seize this opportunity like never before. But first, we must be honest about the challenges we face. While they are plentiful, they will be annihilated by this great momentum that the world is now witnessing in the United States of America."

Allegation of a 'Papa-Piti' Scenario

The usual 'mauvaises langues' are alleging that MMM MP Franco Quirin was purposely passed by for the Ministry of Youth & Sports portfolio, which was his due. This was done on the certainty that he would object. His objection has cost him dear, i.e. the position of Vice President of the MMM which has gone to Joana, daughter of the Leader of the party, Paul Bérenger. MP Franco Quirin is on holiday overseas. He is expected to be back on 20 January and to make a statement on his revocation as V.P.

I feel mad, sad and overwhelmed, says Mylene from Japan

You may have already guessed the reason behind those feelings.

The cause is the inauguration of the 47th president of the United States of America, Donald John Trump on Monday, January 20, in the year of the snake according to the Chinese Zodiac.

It's not just that he's been labelled a lawbreaker, bully, cheat and a very dangerous politician, nor that despite these shortcomings, he was democratically elected to the highest office in the land.

It's the surprising shift in stance from other politicians, columnists, celebrities and top business people who seem to have become ardent supporters of Trump.

This has not gone unnoticed.

"Everybody was fighting me in (my) 1st term, now they want to be my friend," Trump said at his first news conference since his leadership victory six weeks ago.

Since that time, Prime Minister Ishiba has made several attempts to schedule an in-person meeting with Trump, but without success.

On the other hand, Akie Abe, the widow of the late former Japanese Prime Minister, Shinzo Abe, (who served terms from 2006 - 2007 and 2012 - 2020) was invited to dine at Mar-a-Lago in Florida on December 15, 2024, where she is said to have had a private meeting with Trump.

Indeed, it is true that the two leaders, Abe and Trump forged a bond over their shared passion for golf during their time in office. They played the game together both in Japan and America, which could explain why Trump frequently refers to Abe as "a great man."

This friendship between the two leaders endured until Shinzo Abe was assassinated on July 8, 2022, in Japan.

Perhaps PM Ishiba should not be concerned about being overlooked. The new President appeared to have him in mind when he gave a book to Akie Abe to pass on to him. Title unknown.

Politics tends to attract fervent supporters from both sides. However, as long as we are aware we are being manipulated, we can opt for a more lighthearted perspective.

With a touch of humour and fun. I picture the United States of America as Gotham City without Batman in sight. Where could our caped crusader be? Will a new hero rise to defeat the city's villains?

Let's look up at the sky!
It's a bird! It's a plane!

Chagos, Chagos, toujours Chagos

The newspapers speculating on Trump's reaction to the transfer of the Chagos Archipelago by Britain to the jurisdiction of Mauritius say that the President's administration has expressed the view that the British were too much in a hurry in their decision to surrender the Archipelago to its former colony.

The press does not dare to say that the new President himself has expressed this view. The fact is that as far as the new President is concerned, the Chagos is not worth his worry. C'est le cadet de ses soucis, as the French say. He will express himself as and when it tickles his fancy to do so. Worry yourself as much as you like, he could not give a damn. He is on a mission to build an empire in the style of a Julius Caesar. He is a modern-day Caesar. He wants to control Canada, Panama (Canal), Mexico (borders), Greenland. He is now taking control of Gaza, Palestine. Will he bother to let go the Chagos?

The British may decide to comply with the rulings of the International Court of Justice and the resolutions of the United Nations General Assembly to give back the Chagos to Mauritius.

Prime Minister Navin Ramgoolam

But when it comes to the question of paying rent to Mauritius for the lease of Diego Garcia for the US military base, that's where the shoe will pinch. The rent will have to be paid by the US. In avoiding to talk about the Chagos all together, the issue is pushed under the carpet and will wait for the good pleasure of Mr Trump to make a move. But where is the hurry as far as he is concerned? He is depriving the poor people of his own country of free healthcare, will he pay millions to Mauritius?

According to his latest statement at the first sitting of Mauritius National Assembly on Tuesday, 4 February, Prime Minister Ramgoolam declared that the 99-year lease of Diego Garcia to the Americans was OK, but he could not agree on the terms for the renewal of lease thereafter for another 40 years. It will be done by the British alone and Mauritius will have no say in this extension. This is the objectionable point, the PM told the National Assembly. But, there is a change in Ramgoolam's approach to the Diego lease of 99 years. Previously, he was saying this was unacceptable.

PM Ramgoolam told the Assembly that the agreement between former PM Pravind Jugnauth and British Premier Sr Keir Starmer was a sell-out, but he could not say what the deal was, which, according to him, was known only to Jugnauth and Starmer. Yet, he said it was a sell-out.

When the Mauritius PM told the people that his government would seek a better deal from the British, it was thought that the better deal would be in terms of the reduction of the lease from 99 years and for a better financial compensation. But now he says that the 99-year is OK but the extension is objectionable. As for the money, he said in the House on 4 February that it was not a question of money but of sovereignty over the whole of the Chagos Archipelago including Diego Garcia. The question of money was not important. So, no one knows if any money will be paid by the British for the sufferings inflicted on the Chagos people from the time they were evicted from their homeland in the 1960s.

The British will simply wash their hands. You can have the Chagos ... but without Diego Garcia. This is what they told former Mauritius PM Pravind Jugnauth and this is what they tell the now Mauritius PM Navin Ramgoolam. Take it or leave it. Both Jugnauth and Ramgoolam know that Mauritius will do without Diego for a long, long time. Yet, politically, il y a le peuple mauricien à leurrer!

This situation is reminiscent of the 1965 scenario when Navin's father, the then Prime Minister Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, went to the UK to negotiate the independence of Mauritius. He was told "you can have independence but without the Chagos. Take it or leave it. SSR took independence.

Year of the Snake

According to the Chinese horoscope, the snake is a symbol of Peace and Prosperity. Unfortunately, the Jews do not know that.

Netanyahu, with the help of Trump, is decimating the Palestinians on their own land, and are driving them out to other countries, like Egypt etc.

It has announced that Emperor Trump will take control of Gaza in his expansion design..

Eliézer François paid Rs50,000 compensation by Government

Eliézer François, leader of the Mouvement Authentique Mauricien (MAM) has been awarded compensation in the sum of Rs50,000 by the Court in response to his legal action for unlawful arrest in February 2018.

He was arrested during a peaceful demonstration at Roche Bois which he organised in protest against the recruitment procedures at the Cargo Handling Authority.

Mr François had originally made a claim for damages for Rs2 million for his tarnished reputation, and for various expenses in connection with the case.

This case has been dragging on for the last six years. This is the speed of justice in Mauritius. At 88, Eliézer François is happy that this matter has been settled in this lifetime.

It's great that they did not wait for him to come back in the next one.

Ni Chaînes Ni Maîtres, un film dramatique et historique de Simon Moutaïrou “Ni Chaînes Ni Maîtres” est un film dramatique et historique français réalisé par Simon Moutaïrou sorti en salles le 18 septembre 2024.

Synopsis : L'histoire se déroule en 1759 sur l'Isle de France, aujourd'hui connue sous le nom d'île Maurice. Massamba et sa fille Mati, interprétés respectivement par Ibrahima Mbaye et Anna Thiandoum, sont esclaves dans la plantation d'Eugène Larcenet, joué par Benoît Magimel. Massamba aspire à l'affranchissement de sa fille, tandis que Mati rêve de fuir l'enfer de la canne à sucre. Une nuit, Mati s'échappe, poussant son père à la suivre dans sa fuite. Madame La Victoire, une redoutable chasseuse d'esclaves incarnée par Camille Cottin, est engagée pour les traquer. Massamba devient alors un “marron”, un fugitif brisant les chaînes de l'ordre colonial.

Critiques : Le film a été bien accueilli par la critique, obtenant une note moyenne de 3,4 sur 5 basée sur 21 critiques de presse, et une note de 3,5 sur 5 de la part des spectateurs, avec 1 800 notes et 233 critiques.

Le site France Info souligne que le film est “une percutante chronique de la résistance à l'esclavage dans la France du XVIIIe siècle”, mettant en avant la dimension épique et philosophique de l'œuvre.

Distribution : Outre Ibrahima Mbaye, Camille Cottin, Anna Thiandoum et Benoît Magimel, le film compte également dans son casting Félix Lefebvre, Vassili Schneider et Lancelot Courcieras.

Disponibilité : Après sa sortie en salles, “Ni Chaînes Ni Maîtres” est disponible en VOD sur plusieurs plateformes, dont Canal VOD, PremiereMax et UniversCiné. Il est également accessible sur Apple TV.

Le film est classé “Tout public avec avertissement”, certaines scènes pouvant heurter la sensibilité des spectateurs.

Are the Palestinian People being destroyed by Israel with the support of America?

Emperor Donald Trump, in the style of Julius Caesar, has said that he will extend his American empire: after taking over the Panama Canal, after converting the Gulf of Mexico into the Gulf of America, after annexing Canada, Greenland and what not!, he is now going to bring Gaza from the Middle East under the control of America to make America great. There will be a Great America as there is a Great Britain.

Soon, Trump will be hailed as a Caesar: a combination of Julius Caesar (who built the Roman Empire), Caligula (who went mad genuinely believing that he was a product of the god sun and goddess moon) and Nero (who burnt Rome for his own personal gratification). All that says a lot about the mental equilibrium of the last two dangerous Roman dictators. During his inaugural speech, American Emperor Trump said that his god wanted him to be re-elected as President in order to reorganise the World Order.

Mankind — since the appearance on Planet Earth, a million years+ ago, of the first creature known as man — has always been dominated by the law of the jungle, La Loi du Plus Fort. Today, this law is, more than ever, evident as shown by the domination of the weaker nations by the stronger nations of this world. No one should despair at this sort of situation because this is natural in the Animal Kingdom to which belongs the creature known as man. All our body functions are similar. All animals eat, digest and evacuate in the same way. Only difference is that man completes the job by doing the paper work or the water work.

Domineering America

Well, that's the dominant nature of America since the time that the first Spanish Conquistadors set foot on the continent a few centuries ago. They killed the natives or put them in reserves.

America must have full control of Planet Earth. We may therefore understand the importance of Israel as an outpost of America in the East of the Planet. Israel was a blessing to America's ambition when Colonial Britain who had control of Palestines in the Middle East took it upon itself to give this country to the wandering Jews of Europe as a home.

The Palestinians under the control of Britain had to submit to this arrangement. Once the Jews set foot in Palestine, they began to claim that, biblically, the land belonged to them. They embarked on a programme to gradually chase the Palestinians out of Palestine and to take the whole country for themselves. This scheme has been going on since the doors were opened to the wandering Jews in 1945 after World War II.

As shown on a BBC documentary, The younger generations of Jews have been chasing the Palestinians out of their homes, killing many of them, and confiscating their lands. This pogrom has been going on for nearly a century until the Palestinians thought that enough was enough and attacked back on 7 October 2023.

This was a golden opportunity for Jewish leader Netanyahu. Israel could now take military action for the final solution towards the Palestinians.

UN Secretary, António Guterres, said that “no war takes place in vacuum”. The Palestinians' uprising of 7 October 2023 was the result of 75 years of repression and extermination of the Palestinians by Jewish immigrants who want the whole of Palestine for themselves. The Jews are encouraged by Americans, Democrats and Republicans alike. The Americans see in Israel an extension of America itself in the East. America needs Israel, it has been said. The people of both countries have similar historical background of taking possession of other people's land which they call their own and subject the natives to submission, it has been said.

With the declared intention of Emperor Trump to take possession of part of Palestine, the Palestinians stand no chance. They are a doomed people. Emperor Trump and dictator Netanyahu want to disperse the Palestinians to other lands. Cisjordanie and Egypt have been mentioned by the two leaders. The world has been become dumb and can only watch.

The Europeans, with the likes of French President Macron and others, are turning a blind eye to the ethnic cleansing taking place in Gaza. Only Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has had the guts to stand up to Trump in his move to remove the Palestinians out of Gaza. Will the Jews living in Gaza be allowed to stay?

How did all that tragedy begin?

The tragedy was put in place in 1917 (a year before the First World War) by Colonial Britain. Foreign Secretary Lord Balfour said that Britain wished to give Palestine to the Wandering Jews of Europe to create a home. Palestine was then under the control of Britain.

How Israel Was Created?

On November 2, 1917, Britain's Foreign Secretary, Arthur Balfour, wrote a letter that would set off a conflict, still being fought more than 100 years later in which he said:

“His Majesty's government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavours to facilitate the achievement of this object”

When Balfour wrote of his government's intent to create a Jewish homeland in Palestine, 90% of the people living there were not Jewish. Just 31 years later, most of them were gone.

A former Jewish soldier, Amitzur Cohen, was asked: How many people do you think you killed this way?

His reply was: I didn't count. I can't really know. I had a machine gun with 250 bullets.

This is the story of the British promise that led to the destruction of Palestine and the creation of the State of Israel.

Let's start with the obvious question:

Why were the British making promises about other people's countries?

Short answer?

Empire is one hell of a drug. This was World War I, and the British were making lots of promises. In addition to promising a Jewish homeland in Palestine. They promised Arab leaders independence if they rose up against Britain's enemy the Ottoman Empire.

British colonial Lord Balfour

The Arabs did. Hollywood even made a movie about it. Arabia's for the Arabs now. That's what I've told them anyway. That's what they think. That's why they're fighting.

Oh, surely. A month after Balfour's letter, British troops took Palestine, ending 400 years of Ottoman rule. The people who lived there were Arabs, mostly Muslims, but they were Christian and Jewish minorities too.

There was also a tiny number of European Jews who in the late 1800s had started building small colonies there. At a time when many Jews were suffering horrific persecution in Europe, they felt Palestine could be an escape. The idea of building up a Jewish presence in Palestine became known as Zionism, but it stayed a fringe movement among European Jews. Many of them felt they shouldn't have to leave their countries to avoid persecution.

But Zionism, as a political movement, took a big step forward with an Austrian man called Theodor Herzl. And this guy is a very important name in this story. In 1896, he published "Der Judenstaat" – or in English, "The Jewish State."

In it, he said, the only way for Jews to avoid Europe's anti-Semitism was not just to leave, but to have their own country. And Herzl didn't just write. The next year he organized a conference in Basel, Switzerland: The First Zionist Congress. The attendees agreed on a program which sought, among other things, to establish a Jewish homeland in Palestine and promote Jewish settlement in Palestine.

Zionism Theodor Herzl

Zionist movement becomes very active

From here on, the Zionist movement became very active, setting up funds to promote Jewish immigration to Palestine, companies to buy land there, and recruiting representatives to advocate for their cause with different governments. A few days after the conference, Herzl wrote this in his diary.

At Basel I founded The Jewish state. In five years perhaps, and certainly in fifty years, everyone will perceive it.

He was only off by one year. Ok, so that is a lot of history, but it's important because the Zionist movement is a critical part of the story going forward.

Especially after it found a friend in the British government where a lot of high ranking officials supported Zionism, sometimes for unexpected reasons.

Prime Minister Lloyd George, for example, was a Christian zealot who believed gathering the Jewish people in Palestine would bring Jesus Christ back to earth. Others, like Balfour believed that getting the Jewish people out of Europe and into their own country would be a good thing. Herzl was pretty visionary when he wrote that the anti-Semitic nations will become our allies. Meanwhile, the Zionist assured Britain that their future country would be a reliable ally. So, that's the back story of how European anti-Semitism, Zionism and British imperialism all led to the Balfour Declaration: The British promise to build a homeland for Jews in Palestine.

Britain helped the creation of Zionism

Now we're going to look at how Britain did that. World War I had been a conflict between rival empires and the winners set up the League of Nations to distribute the losing side's territories between them.

They called it the Mandate System – putting territories once controlled by the Ottoman and German empires under the, "Tutelage of Advanced Nations" until they became independent. Hm, Britain was given the mandate over Palestine, but the Palestinian people were never asked what they wanted or what independence would look like to them.

Listen to what Balfour wrote to one of his colleagues: In Palestine we do not propose even to go through the form of consulting the wishes of the present inhabitants of the country. Instead, it was the Zionists who were consulted about what their vision for Palestine was.

And so the mandate ended up incorporating not just the Balfour Declaration, but several clauses requiring Britain to ensure the establishment of a Jewish home in Palestine. British rule was very accommodating to the Zionist project.

The Jewish community in Palestine grew in numbers with big waves of immigration. They had their own schools and factories and even their own militia, the Haganah. And they were led by the Polish-born David Ben-Gurion, the leader of their representative body, the Jewish Agency.

To the Palestinians, it was clear that Britain wasn't delivering them independence. It was delivering their country to other people. In 1936, they went on strike. British forces tried to break the strike with arrests, torture, mass punishment and executions. Leaders were exiled, weapons confiscated and houses blown up.

Palestinian fighters attacked British and Jewish targets, while British and Haganah forces would carry out joint raids on Palestinian villages. Something had to change. The British government sent a commission called the Peel Commission to figure it out, but their proposed solution was typical: Just draw another British line on the map. Divide the country, give this part to the Jews and that part to the Palestinians and make that part of Transjordan next door.

Oh, and because the Palestinians were a majority in the country, 250,000 of them would have to be removed by force to make the Jewish state viable. Remember, these were the proposals that were meant to calm things down. Spoiler: they didn't. Instead, the revolt continued until 1939, by which time about 10% of Palestine's adult male population had either been killed, injured arrested or exiled.

The British government really needed a solution – so here comes another report. The commission is studying the 20 year old Jewish settlements in British-mandated Palestine.

The 1939 White Paper created a conflict between the British and the Zionists for the first time, because it rejected partition and said the solution was for Palestine to gain independence within 10 years, with everyone living there sharing it together.

Crucially, it also imposed severe limits on Jewish land purchases and immigration. To the Zionists, this felt like a betrayal. In response, some set off bombs across the country, killing dozens of Palestinians. But soon everyone was distracted by something much bigger. More than 60 million people were killed in World War II, including 6 million Jews murdered in Nazi death camps. Jewish survivors fled Europe with a large number of them trying to find safety in Palestine, despite the British limit on Jewish immigration. This set off a more direct confrontation between the Zionist and the British, with Palestinians often targeted as well.

The Zionist knew two things: Militarily, they were stronger than the Palestinians and Britain was exhausted by World War II, so it wouldn't have the stomach to keep fighting in Palestine.

They were right. In 1947, after 30 years of occupation, Britain announced it was quitting Palestine and asked the newly formed United Nations to clean up its mess.

All right 1947 and 1948 are the most pivotal years in this story. So let's take a look at how things are lining up. During British rule, Jews had gone from 10% to 30% of the population, and owned about 6% of the land. Under Ben-Gurion's leadership, the Jewish Agency was pretty much functioning as a government for the Jewish community. And the Zionist militias had tens of thousands of soldiers, modern weapons and officers who had already fought in World War II.

On the other side, the Palestinians had not been allowed to develop their own administration or military. But as they waited for the UN's solution, they were still the majority all over the country. In November 1947, the UN – then only made up of a fraction of the world's countries – voted to partition Palestine.

This plan marks off 55% of the country for a Jewish state. But the UN never explained how it could be a Jewish state when half the people in its territory were Palestinian.

To nobody's surprise Palestinians – and in fact all Arabs – rejected the UN's plan. Ben-Gurion and the Zionist leadership accepted, but they saw an opportunity. With the British on the way out, the Zionists knew they would have the strongest military in Palestine. Their forces were instructed to seize more territory than they'd been awarded by the UN and to do what was necessary to reduce the number of Palestinians in it.

In cities like Haifa, the militias set off car bombs in Palestinian neighborhoods. They attacked villages and forced residents out. – Haganah troops have driven the Arabs out of the beleaguered city, taking many prisoners. After inspecting parts of western Jerusalem that have been emptied of Palestinians, Ben-Gurion said: In many Arab neighborhoods in the west, you do not even see one Arab... If we persist, it is quite possible that in the next six or eight months, there will be considerable changes in the country, and to our advantage.

Cruelty of the Jews

One of the events that helped speed up these changes took place on April 9, 1948, when the village of Deir Yassin scene was attacked. A British government report to the United Nations describes the scene. 250 people were killed in circumstances of great savagery. Women and children were stripped, lined up, photographed and then slaughtered by automatic firing. The story of what happened at Deir Yassin set off panic all over the country. As news spread, people fled, fearing they would be next. Historians have recorded dozens of similar massacres during this period. Each time they would result in entire communities fleeing.

Tuvia Heller, former Israeli platoon leader said there was always an order – and it came from Ben Gurion – “{Drive the people out.”

Eliyahu Levi – former Israeli said “we occupied a place, tractors razed the place. Nothing remained of the village. Why? Because they didn't want anyone to return, or to leave any trace of the place.

By the time Britain ended its mandate on May 15th, 1948, 250,000 Palestinians had fled. The night before David Ben-Gurion announced the founding of the State of Israel, with himself as its first prime minister.

He was standing under a giant portrait of Herzl, 51 years after Herzl had predicted this very moment. The Zionist militias came together as the newly formed Israel Defense Forces, but the fighting wasn't over. With the British out of the way, soldiers from several Arab countries entered Palestine, but the Israeli army was better equipped, better organized and, unlike the Arab armies, had a unified command and backing from several European countries.

Israeli forces pushed into places that the UN had assigned to the Palestinian state, like the towns of Lydda and Ramleh. 50,000 people were forced to flee from there, many of foot, in what became known as the Lydda Death March. After being emptied, the towns were given Hebrew names: Lod and Ramla. Like in many other empty towns, the buildings and homes were taken over by the new Israeli state and given to Jews. By the time the UN secured an armistice, three quarters of the Palestinian people had become refugees. In Arabic, they call this the Nakba – literally, the catastrophe. The new state of Israel made up 78% of what had been Palestine. The remaining parts were annexed by Jordan or taken over by Egypt.

A year later the UN passed a resolution calling for all Palestinian refugees to be allowed to return home. They never have been, Palestine had been erased by the Jews.

In the decades since, at partition the land. With each successive attempt, the territory offered to Palestinians in their historic homeland shrinks even more.

Ironically, Israel is still struggling to maintain the population advantage it gained in 1948 when it forced all those people out because in 1967, it occupied the West Bank and Gaza, bringing all the Palestinians living there under its rule. And so today the population of Jews and non-Jews in this land is roughly equal. But those living under occupation have no rights, no citizenship and no prospect of independence. The Nakba era tactics of settlement, home demolitions and expulsion are still used against them.

Yonatan Yosef, a Member of the Jerusalem City Council says “We want Nakba, Nakba now. We want Nakba, Nakba now!”

Editor' Note: If there was someone sitting up there in the sky, watching over the creatures of Planet Earth, that someone would send Nakba on Yonatan Yosef and his likes. The question is there someone up there watching on all the criminality going on?

Planet people should not despair at the extent of killings that take place on Planet Earth. It is in the nature of creatures on this planet to devour one another.

One million years ago (plus) when in the Animal Kingdom, the creatures known as men first appeared on Planet earth, they were cannibalistic. Living in tribes here and there (Israel had 12 tribes at one time). The various primitive tribes, at the beginning of human life on this Planet, used to massacre one another. As cannibals, they fed on the flesh and organs of the tribal beings they killed.

Younger generations of Jews whose parents came to take over Palestine are now exterminating all Palestinians. They seize their lands and drive them out of their homes.

After a few thousand years on the planet, men have changed from cannibalism to being carnivorous, i.e. they now feed only on other animals than men. Some have become even more sophisticated. These people do no longer feed on other animals. They feed on plants (Bâton mouroungue, brède moroungue, bringels etc).

So, we should not despair at what we consider as cruelty among the creatures known as men. This, as we have said, again and again, is natural among animals in the Animal Kingdom. In the sea, the sharks devour all the small fishes, in the air the vultures devour the small birds, in the jungle the beasts like the lions, tigers, leopards etc feed on other weaker animals. Closer to us, the cats feed on the rats. Men kill men for various reasons.

In the beginning they used sticks, bows and arrows for the killing. Over the years, they have turned the sticks, bows, and arrows into guns and bombs, into nuclear arms and weapons of mass destruction. What for? To exterminate one another. Why? because apart the natural instinct to kill, men need lebensraum, the German word for 'expansion'. They want territories, and they go stealing territories on which live other men. Some men find a sadistic pleasure in shedding blood of other men.

Fortunately, there will be an end to all that killing, an end to everything, including the Planet Earth itself. Within a certain period of time, the Planet will be swallowed by the Sun. How and Why? It's another story.
